

FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN IRAN: MULTINATIONAL FIRMS' COMPLIANCE WITH U.S. SANCTIONS

BY DAVID ADESNIK AND SAEED GHASSEMINEJAD

SEPTEMBER 10, 2018

When President Donald Trump withdrew from the nuclear deal with Iran, he ushered in a high-stakes competition between the United States and Europe to determine whether unilateral U.S. sanctions could impose overwhelming pressure on Iran, or if European governments could protect the economic gains that accrued to Tehran from the nuclear deal. If European countermeasures defused American sanctions, the incentives for Iran to abide by the deal would remain intact. Perhaps more importantly, Europe would demonstrate that Washington cannot wage economic warfare without its consent and participation.

A critical measure of European ability to restrain the United States is the response of European multinational corporations to the return of U.S. sanctions. In addition, it is important to monitor how top Asian multinationals navigate the transatlantic competition. Will leading multinationals withdraw from the Iranian market rather than risk losing access to American markets and the U.S. financial system? Or will firms conclude the U.S. threats are hollow, since punishing European and Asian multinationals would inflict substantial damage on American firms and consumers?

Home countries of firms that reportedly did business with Iran after the implementation of the JCPOA:

 Austria	 Denmark	 India	 Netherlands	 Singapore	 Switzerland
 Belgium	 France	 Indonesia	 New Zealand	 South Korea	 Turkey
 Canada	 Germany	 Italy	 Norway	 Spain	 United Kingdom
 China	 Greece	 Japan	 Poland	 Sweden	 United States
 Czech Republic	 Hungary	 Malaysia	 Russia

This report serves as a scorecard for all those who are tracking sanctions compliance, including the Department of the Treasury, Department of State, and U.S. officials in other government agencies who monitor sanctions compliance. It provides a country-by-country list of firms with investments in Iran, indicating which ones are likely to stay, which to leave, and which have made no announcement. In all, the report covers 232 companies and business associations, of which 67 are part of the Fortune Global 500 list of firms with the highest revenues.

In the four months since the U.S. withdrawal from the 2015 nuclear deal, 31 European and Asian firms in the Global 500 announced they would be leaving the Iranian market or hinted their exit was imminent. The list includes France's Total, Airbus, and PSA/Peugeot; Denmark's Maersk, Germany's Allianz, and Siemens; Italy's Eni; Japan's Mazda and Mitsubishi UFJ Financial Group; and the UK's BP. In contrast, Renault is the only European member of the Global 500 that expressed an intention to resist American pressure, yet its COO indicated in July that the company will suspend operations.

Since U.S. sanctions do not apply in general to food and medicine, Nestle has announced it will continue operations in Iran. France's Sanofi, Germany's Bayer, and Switzerland's Roche have not yet announced their plans, yet sanctions may not affect their pharmaceutical work, nor Danone's beverage business. Lufthansa will also continue its flights to Iran, which do not necessarily conflict with sanctions.

All together, we assess that 71 companies plan to withdraw from Iran, 19 plan to stay, and 142 have either not decided or not broadcast their decision.

Of course, the final results are not yet in. When the U.S. withdrew from the nuclear deal, Treasury announced it would reinstate some sanctions after a 90-day "wind-down period" and the remainder after a 180-day wind-down.<sup>1</sup> That 90-day period is over, but many companies may still be reviewing their options and holding off on firm announcements until November.

Beyond monitoring compliance with sanctions, it is essential to ask why firms have decided to leave. Their answers demonstrate how sanctions compliance has become an integral part of corporate risk management. "BP always complies with applicable sanctions," the British firm said after suspending a joint venture with an Iranian partner.<sup>2</sup> "We cannot defy the United States," Italian refinery operator Saras told Reuters.<sup>3</sup> These are only partial answers, however, since the question remains why sanctions compliance has become increasingly automatic and defiance of Washington almost unthinkable.

The answer has to do with the mismatch between the economic power of the United States and Iran; the U.S. economy is roughly fifty times the size of the Iranian one. Together, the EU economies may be comparable in size to that of the United States, yet multinationals are not choosing between access to EU versus U.S. markets. Rather, they are choosing between the U.S. and Iran – the world's number one market and a corrupt, mismanaged backwater. The dollar is also the world's leading reserve currency and the predominant medium of international trade, so losing access to it would have major repercussions for any multinational. Thus, even a marginal risk of sanctions tends to be intolerable.

One of the best illustrations of this dynamic is the case of OMV, an Austrian energy firm with 20 billion euros in annual sales. Three weeks after insisting it would not cancel contracts in Iran, the firm's CEO told Reuters, "Let's face it, you cannot simply carry on in Iran. U.S. sanctions are a much bigger risk for OMV's business than any possible compensation that Europe ... could offer."<sup>4</sup>

For some small- and medium-sized firms with less exposure to the U.S. market and the dollar, the calculus may be different. Plum contracts in Iran may outweigh ties to the U.S. market. They also may assume that their modest size may diminish Treasury's interest in targeting them. Of course, Treasury may decide to make an example of one or more firms in this category to demonstrate that they are not immune.

The far more important exception to the pattern of compliance consists of state-owned or state-controlled firms in Russia and China whose decisions reflect political imperatives and who are positioned to withstand the impact of sanctions. The most significant examples are China's state-owned energy giants, CNPC and Sinopec, Chinese railway firm CREC, and the Kremlin-controlled energy companies, Gazprom and Rosneft. These are the only five firms in the Global 500 whose actions indicate they will resist sanctions. (As noted above, Nestle will remain, but its products are sanctions-compliant.) Turkish firms are also likely to remain in Iran, in light of Ankara's hostility toward the U.S. and pervasive influence in the corporate sector.

Beyond China, Asian multinationals lean clearly toward compliance with U.S. sanctions. MUFG and Mizuho, both major Japanese financial firms, will no longer handle Iran-related transactions. South Korean firms have not been as decisive, yet two arms of Hyundai have terminated their business. Significantly, Indian refiner Reliance Industries said it would stop importing oil from Tehran, even though New Delhi supports the European effort to salvage the nuclear deal with Iran. Russia's Lukoil also suspended plans for new projects in Iran, citing U.S. sanctions as the reason.

Implications for Addressing the Iranian Nuclear Threat

Beyond the question of whether multinationals will comply with U.S. sanctions is the broader issue of how their compliance should inform Washington's ongoing campaign to address the threat of Iran's nuclear and missile capabilities. To secure a better deal from Tehran, Washington will need much greater leverage at the negotiating table. Opponents of President Trump's withdrawal from the nuclear deal argued that it would raise the risk of armed conflict, since the U.S. would have to employ threats of war to increase its leverage. This argument reflected the underlying assumption that the unilateral reinstatement of sanctions would not be an effective means of exerting pressure.

If compliance with U.S. sanctions remains the rule among multinationals, it should allay the concerns of opponents to American withdrawal. If the outright opposition of European governments cannot stop multinationals from complying with U.S. sanctions, then Tehran will feel the pressure and Washington will have greater leverage. The compliance of multinationals is not the only measure of sanctions' effectiveness, but it suggests that American resolve may be more important than a transatlantic consensus.

Furthermore, there is clearly an alternative to saber-rattling as a means of pressuring Iran. A credible threat of force will still be necessary to prevent Iran from embarking on a crash program to build the bomb, yet economic and political pressure should remain the focal points. With Iran's currency in freefall and its people marching to protest both dictatorship and deprivation, Tehran's ability to resist coercion has diminished substantially.

The U.S. should still work to bridge its differences with Europe, however, since a united front would dash Iranian hopes of sowing division in the West. Certainly, the Trump administration could employ a less confrontational approach to America's longstanding democratic allies. Meanwhile, instead of working against U.S. sanctions, European leaders should work with the U.S. to fix the principal flaws of the nuclear deal while holding Iran accountable for its aggression, terrorism, and human rights violations.

Ultimately, the violent Islamism of Iran's clerical regime poses as much of a threat to Europe as it does to the United States. In July, German authorities filed charges of conspiracy to commit murder against an Iranian diplomat who recruited agents to bomb a 25,000-strong Paris gathering organized by an exiled opposition group.<sup>5</sup> The potential for such a regime to develop nuclear weapons should be more than enough of a reason for Western leaders to overcome their differences.

Sources

Since the conclusion of the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), FDD has monitored the public announcement of new investments in Iran by multinational corporations in North America, Europe, and Asia. Since the U.S. withdrawal from the JCPOA in May, FDD has also monitored announcements regarding the status of those investments.

Using only publicly available information, this memo presents a country-by-country list of which companies are likely to stay, which to leave, and which have not announced a decision. The information in this memo is carefully sourced and footnoted, but far from exhaustive. It should be used for informational purposes and not to make legal determinations.

The statements made and actions taken by certain companies are ambiguous; labeling them as likely to stay or leave requires subjective judgement. In addition, there is insufficient information to determine if numerous planned investments in Iran ever came to fruition. For the purposes of this list, if it remains unclear whether a planned investment materialized, the relevant company appears under the heading of ‘No Announcement.’

Decisions of Major Companies

DECISIONS TO STAY

FDD has identified several major companies that have expressed an intention to stay in Iran or appear highly likely to do so based on their actions to date. The most significant EU-based firm is France’s Renault, whose CEO pledged last year to stay in Iran even if the U.S. reinstated sanctions. He affirmed that position on June 15, yet the company’s COO said in late July the company is likely to suspend operations. Therefore, we consider Renault to be leaving the Iranian market, although it may retain a token presence. Austria’s OMV also reversed its initial decision to remain.

Since sanctions do not apply to food and medicine, Switzerland’s Nestle will continue operations. While British Airways and Air France-KLM have cancelled service to Iran, Lufthansa will continue its flights, which do not necessarily conflict with sanctions.

Together, China, Russia, and Turkey account for 10 of the 19 firms likely to stay in Iran. China’s CNPC is considering whether to increase its share of a multibillion-dollar expansion of the South Pars gas field by purchasing a majority stake from France’s Total, which is leaving the country. Meanwhile, Sinopec plans to continue imports of Iranian crude. Two months after the U.S. withdrawal from the JCPOA, Chinese railway giant CREC reached an agreement to build a subway line in Ahvaz. There is little reason to expect that other Chinese firms will leave the Iranian market, either.

Gazprom and Rosneft, the Kremlin-controlled energy firms, are reportedly in negotiations with Iran’s oil ministry for projects worth up to $10 billion. Tupras, Turkey’s only oil refiner, will decrease its imports from Iran, but not end them.

Only six European and one Asian firm outside China, Russia, and Turkey seem likely to resist sanctions. Austria’s LMF, a manufacturer of oil and gas compressors, stated that it aims to remain in business in Iran. So does the German pump and valve manufacturer KSB.

Italy’s Saipem is actively seeking projects in the oil, gas, and petrochemical sectors in Iran, which indicates it is not planning to leave. Denikon signed a MOU in July to build solar power plants together with China’s Sinosteel.

The London-based Pergas group, which recently signed a deal to develop the Keranj oil field in Iran’s Khuzestan province, also appears eager to stay. In addition, the CEO of the Swiss rail firm Matisa said his firm “will continue to operate regardless of U.S. sanctions.”<sup>6</sup>

Singapore’s Hyflux received a letter of intent in July to build a second desalination plant in Iran.

DECISIONS TO LEAVE

There is a long list of companies that have announced they will pull out from Iran immediately or in the absence of a U.S. sanctions waiver. Unsurprisingly, American companies such as Boeing, Honeywell, Dover, and General Electric plan to comply.

The French oil giant Total did not receive its requested waiver. Since Total is cross-listed in New York, it is under direct supervision of the SEC and has been previously fined for bribing an Iranian official. French automaker PSA/Peugeot, a long-time partner of Iran's auto manufacturing industry, is also leaving Iran. While Airbus will be seeking a waiver from U.S. authorities, the probability that such a waiver will be issued is almost zero. Air France-KLM Group announced it will stop serving Iranian destinations in September, citing a lack of commercial viability.

Major German firms are also heading for the exit. Daimler suspended activities in August and Volkswagen indicated it would comply with sanctions, while Deutsche Telekom and Deutsche Bahn cancelled their projects in Iran. Reports indicate that BASF subsidiary Wintershall will not pursue new projects, either. Siemens had several deals with Iranian companies but is winding down its current business in Iran and will not sign any new deals. Container line Hapag-Lloyd is scaling back its Iran business, while insurer Allianz is preparing to wind down its Iran business, which it described as minimal.

Italian oil giant Eni said its contract to purchase oil from Iran is expected to terminate by the end of 2018. The Danish shipping company Maersk-Moller as well as Danske Bank announced they would leave Iran. In the financial sector, Austrian Oberbank and Belgian KBC severed ties with Iran. Significantly, Oberbank had signed a finance deal worth €1 billion with 14 Iranian banks in 2017.

One of the most interesting cases is Russia's Lukoil, which had several contracts and agreements that it has now suspended. Its hesitation shows the long reach of the U.S. sanctions.

Despite Indian officials' public support for the continuation of doing business with Iran, Indian refineries are already winding down operations. Nayara Energy, one of the country's biggest buyers of Iranian oil, plans to end its imports of Iranian crude by November, while Reliance Industries said it would import no more oil from Iran. Looking ahead, the U.S. should closely monitor the decisions made by Indian banks, whom the government is pressuring to continue working with Iran.

NO DECISION YET

The majority of companies on the list have not yet announced their intentions. As the wind-down period for operations draws to a close, their decisions should become clear. Also, many companies that entered Iran only signed memorandums of understanding (MOUs) or other types of agreements that did not entail a final contract. As such, no announcement of a withdrawal may be necessary. However, there are cases where a contract was signed and executed but the company has kept its silence about its future in Iran. The U.S. should closely follow these cases and proactively pressure companies to cut their ties to Iran.

Among German firms, insurer Munich Re, auto parts maker ZF Friedrichshafen, and metals company Mansfelder Kupfer und Messing (MKM) are among the major companies that have not yet announced a final decision about their Iran contracts.

Another company to watch is the Italian financial giant SACE, which has not yet announced whether it will provide insurance or other forms of support to those investing in Iran.

South Korea's Hyundai signed deals with Iran in the oil, gas, petrochemical, and automotive sectors. Hyundai's shipbuilding and merchant marine components are winding down the business, but it is not clear if all Hyundai arms will do so. Another South Korean company to watch is Korea Exim Bank, which had announced it would finance $8 billion of a South Korean investment package as of June 2017.

Major Chinese firms such as CITIC, CRRC, and CRIC have not yet announced any decision, but it is unlikely they will leave Iran willingly. China's oil purchases from Iran provide Chinese firms a solid ground to operate there.

Austria

STAY

LMF: Manufactured compressor systems in Iran since 2016 and stated in May 2018 that it aims to remain in business in Iran.<sup>7</sup>

LEAVE

Oberbank: Signed a €1-billion finance deal with 14 Iranian banks in 2017 and transacted regularly with 21 Iranian banks.<sup>8</sup>

- ▷ In June 2018, the bank announced it was winding down operations in Iran. “The threat posed to European companies by U.S. secondary sanctions is forcing us to retreat,” its website said.<sup>9</sup>

OMV: Signed a deal with the National Iranian Oil Company in 2016 to carry out joint studies in the Zagros and Persian Gulf regions.<sup>10</sup>

- ▷ In May 2018, OMV announced it would continue with planned projects in Iran,<sup>11</sup> yet its CEO later said that U.S. sanctions made this impossible.<sup>12</sup>

NO ANNOUNCEMENT

3PMan: Signed a MOU with Iran’s Auto Parts Manufacturing association, according to an Iranian Chamber of Commerce announcement in 2016.<sup>13</sup>

Elin Motoren: Signed a MOU with MAPNA Iran in 2016 focused on transferring technology related to manufacturing electric motors.<sup>14</sup>

Erste Bank: Told the Financial Times in 2016, “We have started on-boarding Iranian banks in terms of trade finance co-operation.”<sup>15</sup>

- ▷ In May 2018, Erste stated it never signed any contracts as part of a correspondent bank network.<sup>16</sup>

Examon Pharma: Reached a cooperation agreement with Rozhin Darou, according to an Iranian Chamber of Commerce announcement in 2016.<sup>17</sup>

- ▷ The website of Examon Pharma’s parent company continues to emphasize its commitment to doing business in Iran.<sup>18</sup>

Gesamtverband Autoteile-Handel (GVA): Reached a MOU with Iran’s Auto Parts Manufacturing association, according to an Iranian Chamber of Commerce announcement in 2016.<sup>19</sup>

Raiffeisen Bank International: Announced plans in 2016 to open a representation office in Iran to facilitate transactions of foreign entities seeking to do business in Iran.<sup>21</sup>

- ▷ In May 2018, a Raiffeisen spokesperson said the bank has no exposure in Iran.<sup>22</sup>

VAMED: Finalized plans in 2016 to build a hospital in Shiraz, according to the firm’s Iranian partner.<sup>23</sup>

Belgium

LEAVE

KBC Bank: Announced in June 2018 that it would only conduct humanitarian transactions with Iran due to the U.S. re-imposition of sanctions – an exception permitted by Washington. “KBC never financed any deal with Iran but only processed the settlement of transactions of its customers,” the company said in a statement.<sup>24</sup>

Canada

NO ANNOUNCEMENT

Bombardier: Did not confirm a January 2018 report in the Iranian press that it had reached a preliminary agreement to sell its first commercial aircraft order from Iran, which would include 10 new CRJ-900 regional jets.<sup>25</sup>

- ▷ On May 1, 2018, Iranian state-run media reported a statement by Qeshm Air CEO Mahmoud Shekarabi that his company is negotiating with Bombardier for an order of 10 planes.<sup>26</sup>

China

STAY

China Railway Engineering Corporation (CREC): Signed a contract in March 2018 to construct a high-speed rail line in Iran between Tehran and Isfahan in concert with Italy’s Ferrovie dello Stato.<sup>27</sup>

- ▷ The company signed another deal in July 2018 with Iran’s Ahvaz Municipality to build the city’s second subway line, according to an Iranian press report.<sup>28</sup>

CNPC: Signed a deal with France’s Total and the National Iranian Oil Company in 2017 to further develop the South Pars gas field for the next 20 years, taking a 30-percent stake in the development.<sup>29</sup>

- ▷ One of CNPC’s subsidiaries, PetroChina, also started talks in 2017 regarding closer cooperation with Iran in the petrochemical industry.<sup>30</sup>
- ▷ CNPC indicated in May 2018 that it will take over Total’s stake in the South Pars oil field (50.1 percent) if the French company withdraws.<sup>31</sup>

Dongming: Stated in July 2018 that it would turn to Iran for crude oil imports while shunning American crude in light of tariff risks.<sup>32</sup>

Sinopec: A Sinopec executive said that U.S. sanctions have not had an impact on China’s crude oil purchases from Iran. He added that oil refineries in China use ships without exposure to the United States for Iranian crude oil purchases.<sup>33</sup>

Sinosteel: Signed a MOU in July 2018 to help build solar power plants in the city of Yazd in cooperation with Italian firm Denikon.<sup>34</sup>

NO ANNOUNCEMENT

China Development Bank: Signed a cooperation agreement in September 2017 with the Central Bank of Iran to provide financing worth $15 billion for development projects.<sup>35</sup>

China National Machinery Import and Export Corporation (CMC): Signed a €2.2-billion deal in May 2017 to electrify a rail line between Tehran and Mashhad.<sup>36</sup>

CITIC Trust: Agreed in 2017 to extend $10 billion in lines of credit to five Iranian banks to support projects, according to then-head of the Central Bank of Iran, Valiollah Seif.<sup>37</sup>

CRIC: Signed an agreement with Iranian Aluminum Company in 2016 for a joint venture investment valued at approximately $2 billion.<sup>38</sup>

CRRC: Subsidiary CRRC Nanjing Puzhen signed a deal in March 2018 with Iran's Industrial Development and Renovation Organization to provide 450 subway wagons.<sup>39</sup>

- ▷ Another subsidiary, China Civil Engineering Construction Corp, signed a contract worth more than $500 million in January 2018 for a new railway line between Kermanshah and Khosravi.<sup>40</sup>
- ▷ CRRC Nanjing Puzhen had previously signed a MOU in March 2017 to provide 215 subway cars for three Iranian cities.<sup>41</sup>
- ▷ In February 2017, another subsidiary, CRRC Changchun Railway Vehicles Co., completed trial operations in Mashhad and announced it would supply 100 subway cars for the city's metro.<sup>42</sup>
- ▷ In 2016, CRRC Changchun began shipping more than 1,000 subway cars to Iran as part of a $1.39 billion, five-year contract.<sup>43</sup>

Export-Import Bank of China: Planned to open two euro and yuan accounts for the Central Bank of Iran, according to Iranian press reports in 2016.<sup>44</sup>

- ▷ The Exim Bank of China also signed a contract in 2017 for a $1.5-billion loan for a high-speed train in Iran.<sup>45</sup>
- ▷ The bank also committed to $10 billion in loans, according to then-head of the Central Bank of Iran, Valiollah Seif.<sup>46</sup>
- ▷ Sinomach: Signed an agreement worth $845 million in March 2018 to build a railway in western Iran.<sup>47</sup>

Czech Republic

NO ANNOUNCEMENT

- ▷ OSTROJ: Signed a €65 million, two-and-a-half-year contract with Zarand Iranian Steel Company in 2017.<sup>48</sup>
- ▷ Solek Group: Implemented a project in Iran in 2018, according to its website.<sup>49</sup> The website also lists four projects under development in Iran.<sup>50</sup>

Denmark

LEAVE

A.P. Moller Holding: Subsidiary Maersk Tankers (formerly owned by Maersk), announced it would wind down transporting cargos to and from Iran by November 4, 2018.<sup>51</sup>

Danske Bank: Signed a €500-million finance contract with 10 Iranian banks in 2017.<sup>52</sup>

- ▷ Danske Bank said in 2018 that it had decided prior to the U.S. announcement withdrawal from the nuclear deal to phase out operations in Iran due to reputational risks and that it would suspend existing relations.<sup>53</sup>
- ▷ The bank is under investigation by Danish authorities for numerous cases of money laundering between 2007 and 2015, including cases linked to Iran and North Korea.<sup>54</sup>

Maersk: The CEO stated in May 2018, “With the sanctions the Americans are to impose, you can’t do business in Iran if you also have business in the U.S., and we have that on a large scale. I don’t know the exact timing details, but I am certain that we’re also going to shut down [in Iran].”<sup>55</sup>

Term: Stopped taking new orders in Iran. “We follow the situation closely and always follow the rules. Therefore, we have also stopped taking new orders from Iran,” a spokesperson for the tanker operator said in May 2018.<sup>56</sup>

NO ANNOUNCEMENT

Haldor Topsoe: Opened an office in Tehran in 2016 and signed a contract with Badr-e-Shargh Petrochemical Complex to provide equipment and materials for a new methanol plant in Chabahar, Iran.<sup>57</sup> The company announced in August 2018 that it is cutting 200 jobs from its 2,700 workforce due to U.S. sanctions on Iran.<sup>58</sup>

Leo Pharma: Lists an office location in Iran on its website.<sup>59</sup>

Novo Nordisk: Announced plans in 2015 to build a pharmaceutical manufacturing plant in Iran.<sup>60</sup> According to the company’s website, Novo Nordisk has an office in Tehran but no production plants or R&D centers.<sup>61</sup>

- ▷ During the previous sanctions era, Novo Nordisk operated in Iran through Novo Nordisk Pars, a wholly-owned affiliate.<sup>62</sup>
- ▷ Novo pharmaceutical products and medical devices make up 50 percent of Danish exports to Iran, according to an interview with the Danish ambassador to Iran.<sup>63</sup>
- ▷ According to a 2017 filing with the SEC, the company’s wholly-owned affiliate Novo Nordisk Pars contracts with five companies that may be controlled by the government of Iran. Novo Nordisk Pars also purchased land from a government-controlled holding company in 2016 to construct a manufacturing facility and planned to make monthly payments to the holding company. Novo Nordisk anticipated investing about $72 million over the next five years to build the facility.<sup>64</sup>

France

LEAVE

Airbus: Finalized agreement with Iran Air in 2016 to provide 118 Airbus commercial passenger planes, including 12 A380s, in a $25-billion contract.<sup>65</sup>

- ▷ In May 2018, U.S. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin stated that the United States would revoke Airbus's license to sell passenger airplanes to Iran.<sup>66</sup>

Air France-KLM: Announced in August 2018 it would suspend flights to Iran as of September, explaining the route was not commercially viable.<sup>67</sup>

- ▷ KLM announced in July 2018 it would end its flights to Iran in September 2018. It had previously suspended flights in 2013 but resumed them in 2016 due to the nuclear deal.<sup>68</sup>

Air Liquide: Finalized a technology MOU in March 2018 with Iran's Petrochemical Research and Technology Company.<sup>69</sup>

- ▷ The French industrial group said it will cease all commercial activity in Iran and that it has no investments there.<sup>70</sup>

ATR: Signed a contract in 2017 to provide 20 planes to Iran Air.<sup>71</sup>

- ▷ ATR later announced that it would not deliver the remaining aircraft. The company's CEO cited the impending re-imposition of sanctions in the company's decision.<sup>72</sup>
- ▷ However, five planes were delivered to Iran the day before the U.S. began restoring sanctions.<sup>73</sup>
- ▷ ATR has now applied for waivers from the Treasury Department so that it can complete deliveries of remaining planes; it is awaiting a decision.<sup>74</sup>

AXA: Insured Iran shipments following the nuclear deal, but has refused any new contracts.<sup>75</sup>

CMA CGM: Signed a cooperation agreement in 2016 with the Islamic Republic of Iran Shipping Lines.<sup>76</sup> In July 2018, the shipping group's chief said, "Due to the Trump administration, we have decided to end our service for Iran."<sup>77</sup>

Engie: Announced in May 2018 that it will end its engineering contracts by November. The energy firm says it has no infrastructure in Iran.<sup>78</sup>

Ingenico: Announced in July 2018 that it will end its distribution partnership in Iran before the November re-imposition of sanctions.<sup>79</sup>

PSA: Signed a joint-venture agreement with SAIPA in 2016 to produce and sell Citroen vehicles in Iran, with a planned investment of €300 million in manufacturing and R&D.<sup>80</sup> In addition, PSA brand Peugeot in 2016 established a €400-million joint venture with an Iranian vehicle manufacturer to modernize a car factory near Tehran, which was expected to produce 100,000 vehicles annually.<sup>81</sup>

- ▷ PSA announced in June 2018 it was suspending its joint ventures in Iran.<sup>82</sup> The U.S. denied its request for a waiver.<sup>83</sup>

Renault: Established a joint venture in August 2017 to produce 150,000 additional vehicles in Iran annually, supplementing Renault's existing 200,000 vehicle capacity in the country.<sup>84</sup> The $780-million agreement is the largest foreign auto deal in Iran's history.<sup>85</sup>

- ▷ In October 2017, the firm's CEO said the company would not exit Iran if the U.S. reinstated sanctions.<sup>86</sup> The CEO affirmed that position on June 15, 2018.<sup>87</sup>
- ▷ On July 28, 2018, the COO suggested a reversal may be imminent. Bloomberg characterized his remarks as an indication that "Iran operations are likely to be put on hold to comply with U.S. sanctions."<sup>88</sup>

SCOR: Reached an agreement with the Central Insurance of Iran in 2017 to cover catastrophe excess of loss reinsurance in Iran.<sup>89</sup> SCOR said in July 2018 it would not enter into any new business contracts or renew its existing business in Iran due to U.S. sanctions.<sup>90</sup>

Total: Signed a contract in 2016 to buy up to 200,000 barrels of crude oil from Iran per day.<sup>91</sup> Total also signed a deal with China's CNPC and the National Iranian Oil Company in 2017 to further develop the South Pars gas field for the next 20 years.<sup>92</sup>

- ▷ After the United States denied Total's request for a waiver,<sup>93</sup> the company officially pulled out of the South Pars gas contract.<sup>94</sup>

Wormser: Decided to stop trading with Iran to maintain access to the U.S. dollar, according to a June 2018 report.<sup>95</sup>

NO ANNOUNCEMENT

Accor: Established two hotels in Iran in 2015 and announced plans to open at least 100 more.<sup>96</sup>

Alstom: Signed a deal in 2017 to build metro and rail carriages in Iran.<sup>97</sup>

Bureau Veritas: Established an Iranian branch in 1976 and has operated in Tehran since, supplying certifications, government services and international trade, and marine offshore construction.<sup>98</sup>

CBE Group: Worked on multiple projects related to the construction of tunnels in Iran between 2003 and 2016, according to its website.<sup>99</sup>

- ▷ Coface: Reached an agreement with the Central Bank of Iran in 2016 to settle Coface's debt and resume operations.<sup>100</sup>

Cohen Amir-Aslani: Opened an office in Tehran in 2016 to advise companies looking to invest in Iran.<sup>101</sup>

- ▷ Danone: Has a long-standing joint venture that produces Damavand mineral water, Iran's biggest bottled water brand.<sup>102</sup>
